As future clergy, scholars and community leaders, theology students in Boston will need to learn to communicate across deep divides of faith and spirituality. “Loving and Listening” is a series of Lenten conversations in which people from different traditions can hear one another’s stories and learn to come together as people, instead of political or theological enemies.

We often focus on what separates us, but might there be more in common than we first think?

---

LOCATION TBA

We are currently seeking interest from theology students across campuses. If you are interested in getting involved, Email Kelly Steinhaus, ksteinha@bu.edu